Let us ensure however that a proselytizing spirit does not destroy our work; let our neighbors breathe in peace, let them live quietly under the aegis of the laws that they have made for themselves, and let us not go, as revolutionary firebrands proclaiming ourselves legislators of the Antilles, seek glory by disturbing the tranquility of the neighboring Islands; they have not, like the one that we inhabit, been drenched with the innocent blood of their inhabitants; they have no vengeance to claim from the authority that protects. More than anything else, the battle against terrorism is an affirmation of human values, which are protected by rules that govern all conflicts, whether they be international, internal, or merely represent a struggle for power.
